

OLD WHARF RESTAURANT

“I went with Mr Nelson to the east side of the bay and planted three fine young apple trees in a growing state, nine vines, six plantains, a number of orange and lemon seeds, cherry stones, plum stones, peach, apricot and pumpkins and also two sorts of Indian corn and apple and pear pips.”

The above is an excerpt from the ship’s log of HMS Bounty, provided by Lt. William Bligh when the ship was anchored at Adventure Bay, Bruny island in 1788 (Walker, Vintage Tasmania 2014). When Lt. Bligh returned to Tasmania again in 1792, the vines he had planted were gone and only a single apple tree remained. However, in the 80-100 years the followed Tasmanian viticulture developed dramatically, led by visionaries such as Signor Angelo Giulio Diego Bernacchi. Then, in the 1950s, a French couple named Jean and Cecile Miguet planted Tasmania’s first vineyard near Launceston, followed by an Italian named Claudio Alcorso planting a second vineyard at Moorilla in Hobart. Together, these resourceful Europeans can be seen as the first vigneron of the modern era of Tasmanian cool climate wine. We have so much to thank them for.
